Great Tornado in Maryland.

LOSS OF LIFE AND PROPERTY.—The Columbia and Circuit will fully account of the devastations of the terrible tornado which passed over portions of Allegany County on Saturday night week.

Its ravages in the neighborhood of Selbyport and Allegany were most terrible. Thousands of trees were blown down, stopping up the roads and producing a wilderness of confusion difficult to conceive. Houses were unroofed, barns and stables overthrown and fields of grain destroyed. At Selbyport, a child was killed by the falling of a roof, and in the same vicinity a woman was carried off her feet and torn to pieces by the hurricane.

The storm seems to have leaped over large tracts of country, leaving desolated places. Thus the houses and stable of Mr. Koontz, four miles south of Postburg, were unrooted, and such was the fury of the tempest that one of the beams of the stable, so large as to require eight men to lift it, was carried a distance of nearly two miles. In the neighborhood, however, no other damage seems to have been done.

A correspondent of the Civilian, writing from Little Meadows, gives the following account of the storm in that region:

"The force of the wind was unparalleled for a long time, from that to a mile in width, and in length, from the valley of the Little Crossing where it originated, as far to the southeast of us as I have heard from the Locomong neighborhood. None can at present estimate the amount of damage done to the timber. Trees that had withstood the storm of a thousand winters, unharmed, were twisted off, the splinters scattered in every direction, others were torn up by the roots, whilst others again were left standing, shorn of their limbs, and others blasted trunk and root. The timber, from a few hundred yards west of the place to the Widow Yeads, is literally encumbered with the prostrate trunks and branches of trees."

The damage to the buildings is very great, amounting to many thousand dollars. I append a list of the sufferings, as far as I can, at present, ascertain them. Henry Brown's house, barn, and fencing, were leveled with the ground. Damages probably $1,000. Jacob Blucker's house, barn, and stable, were torn down, and all its fences and crops entirely destroyed, damage estimated at $1,500.

Waldo Yead's house considerably damaged, barn, and other outbuildings, fence, &c., prostrated. Damage $300. Henry Brice, several thousand dollars' worth of the most valuable timber, grain, &c., Aza Beal, and W. M. Magraw, small loss, principally in timber. Joseph Spiker's house and stable had the roofs blown off, by his crop of grain destroyed, and stock injured. Others were more or less injured.

Another correspondent of the Civilian, writing from Postburg, says:

"The damage done to all kinds of property is very considerable, and will be severely felt. The loss of property is not the only loss, for several lives were sacrificed by the distressing calamity. Two little infants, the children of Henry A. Durst and Henry J. Durst, while in a profound sleep, had their brains dashed out by the falling stones of a chimney, which together, with the house, was prostrated to the ground. Among the sufferers in this section are Joel Beale, H. E. Brice, and Wm. Prost, who lost in amounts ranging from $500 to $2,000. Fences were leveled to the ground, crops carried off, houses unrooted, and farm houses completely destroyed by the force of the wind."

The correspondent of the Advertiser says:

"The storm lasted but an instant—a single blast and all was over. It seemed to have invariably moved in belts, a few hundred rods wide. Some idea can be had of its violence when I state that perhaps were torn out of the high ground."
